What is the difference between the Search Results reports?

Version 4.0

After you run a guery or use one of the Research functions in PastPerfect, you have the ability to preview or print a list of your search results. There are actually several different Search Results reports available for any given query. These reports look almost identical in their standard layout; knowing what you need to print is important when deciding which report to modify. Having multiple options gives you the ability to customize these reports to display the information that you want.

After your search results are displaying on the screen, you'll see the print list options at the bottom of your screen. There are four different reports you can print for your results: Standard Fields (without Images), Standard Fields with Images, Extended Fields (without Images), and Extended Fields with Images.

Each of these options are separate reports (under Reports | Research) that can be modified individually. Knowing which report to modify depends on the options you select before printing the list.

Below you will find descriptions and examples of each report. You run a guery as usual; it is just the output that changes depending on your selections when printing.
